“I joined the Society of Biology as a means of gaining the professional recognition that has been so useful to my career”

Linda Pitkin CBiol MSB, Entomologist and Underwater Photographer

“I joined the Society of Biology because I think educating people about science and spreading scientific knowledge is incredibly important”

Professor Elizabeth Fisher FSB, Molecular Geneticist

About us

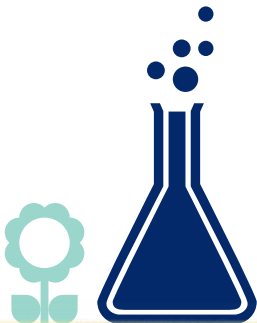

We are the leading professional body for the biological sciences, representing over 80,000 life scientists around the world.

We advise government and influence policy

We champion excellence in biology education

We get the public excited about the life sciences

We are passionate about the professional development of our members

The Biologist Magazine

Written by members for members, biology is brought to life through an impressive range of review articles, whilst topical pieces discuss science policy, new developments or controversial issues.

Professional Recognition

We offer a range of membership grades to match your professional expertise. Our designatory letters signify to all that you are a professional biologist, well qualified and subject to a rigorous code of conduct.

E-bulletins

We regularly publish electronic bulletins to keep members up to date with science policy, biology education and the Society's work at international, national and regional levels.

Networks

Are you interested in discussing current issues in biology, sharing ideas and expanding your network of contacts? Members can take advantage of lectures, lunches, family days out and online networking opportunities.

Continuing Professional Development (CPD)

Our leading CPD framework will help ensure that you remain competitive in your field. We provide all the tools you need to plan, record and evaluate your professional development activities.

Chartered Biologist (CBiol)

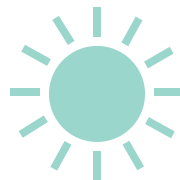

Chartered status is rapidly becoming recognised as a key requirement by employers. Our leading professional qualification is also recognised throughout the European Union.

Travelling Fellowship

The travelling fellowship affords the opportunity of overseas travel in connection with biological study, teaching or research to those who would otherwise be unlikely to have it. We award up to ten grants per year to Affiliate and Associate members.

Members' Area

You are in complete control of your membership through our online Members' Area. Update your contact details, renew your subscription, contact other members, access The Biologist archive and reserve places at our events, all through the click of a mouse.
